

THE TOBIN PROJECT

DEMOCRACY & MARKETS

A graduate fellowship program, based in Cambridge and New Haven, that seeks to foster empirical, historical, and theoretical research into how markets influence democratic institutions and how democracy shapes markets.

2011 Graduate Student Fellowship Recipients

Yingyao Wang

Sociology, Yale University

“Politicians or Technocrats?: Understanding the Economic Officials in Reform China”

Joshua Specht

History, Harvard University

“Everything but the Moo: The Consolidation of the Cattle-Beef Complex, 1880-1910”

Evan Schnidman

Government, Harvard University

“Policymaking at the U.S. Federal Reserve: An Institutional Study”

Sabeel Rahman

Government, Harvard University;

J.D. Candidate, Harvard Law School

“Achieving Democratic Freedom in the Market Economy: The Case of Financial Reform”

Vincent Pons

Economics, MIT

“Registering Unregistered Voters: A Comparison of Different Registration Interventions and their Impact on the Number of Newly Registered Voters and their Participation in the Following Elections”

Christopher Miller

History, Yale University

“Globalization and Geopolitics: Why did Global Economic Integration Increase during the 1980s?”

Joo-A Julia Lee

Public Policy, Harvard Kennedy School

“The Role of Perceived Meritocracy in Justification of Inequality”

David Huyssen

U.S. History, Yale University

“Class Collisions: Wealth and Poverty in New York, 1890-1920”

Alexander Hertel-Fernandez

Government and Social Policy, Harvard University

“Taxation and American Social Insurance: Diverging Models of Financing Unemployment Insurance in the States”

Ruth Anne French-Hodson

J.D. Candidate, Yale Law School

“Independent Regulatory Agencies and the Capture Argument: Administrative Structure and Political Rhetoric”

Marissa Doran

J.D. Candidate, Yale Law School

“Justice, Expediency, and the ‘Good American’: Battles for the Franchise in the United States”

Prithviraj Datta

Government, Harvard University

“Beyond Corruption, Equalization, and Distortion: A New Approach to Regulating Corporate Participation in Electoral Campaigns”

Benjamin Barber IV

Political Science, Duke University

“The Roving Bandit or the Unruly Mob: An Experimental Test of the Micro-Foundation of Democracy and Dictatorships”

For more information about the Tobin Project's graduate student programs, please contact Kendell Sadiik at ksadiik@tobinproject.org.